

Material Whirl

As our living spaces expand to include the outdoors, fabric manufacturers have responded with a bevy of textiles for alfresco areas. Some patterns are subtle to go along with upholstery found in indoor rooms. Other textiles offer more vibrant and bold designs to enliven such spaces as patios, as seen above on pillows made with Perennials Fabrics' new Color Pops collection. The line is available in numerous colorways and features four styles, including three Jacquard weaves and a velvet. See more examples of eye-catching outdoor fabrics on the pages ahead.

TREND WATCH

Sketchbook Floral is a reversible solution-dyed acrylic weave from Chella Textiles' Contours Collection. Shown in Green Oasis, it is available in five additional colorways.

Sunbrella has been manufacturing outdoor fabrics since 1961; Earthen Collection is one of its recent introductions. It includes stripes, solids, a velvet and a nubby boucle.

Designer Liora Manné used a patented process to create a line of indoor/outdoor textiles from polyester fibers coated with natural latex. Her Vines pattern is shown in Sage on these outdoor ottomans.

Vividly colored flowers are the centerpiece of Liora Manné's Disco fabric. It comes in five colorways, including white (pictured), and has an antimicrobial finish to prevent deterioration and mildew.

The Sand Collection by Sunbrella features a neutral palette warmed by orange and red hues. The company's textiles are stain- and fade-resistant, and are made from recyclable material.

Suitable for furniture on covered patios, Paul Brayton Designs' Almost Collection replicates leather. The fabric is offered in 32 colorways, as well as an embossed suede. □
